7.2 Delivering effective presentations on technical topics

In order to tune your audience and maintain their attention throughout the presentation, it is wise to resort to signpost language, i.e. phrases that announce the stage/section of the presentation and mark the shift from one section to another by signalling out what has been presented and what will follow. Similarly with the function of signposts in traffic, signpost language performs a guiding function and ensures maintenance of audience's interest in the topic or its recovery in case it has been diverted.

The following chart provides examples of signpost language correlated with the stage of the presentation:
